

CRACK THE STORYTELLING CODE

The Reason Why Stories Are Your Most Valuable Communication Tool

Imagine you're sitting near a campfire. You can almost feel the heat from the flames and smell the burning wood. You're listening to a story so captivating that you lose track of where you are.

You're living every twist and turn feeling the character struggles and successes as if you are experiencing them. You're hooked from the start and on the edge of your seat until the end.

Why does this type of story capture you so deeply?

Because it unlocked the storytelling CODE, the secret that is shared by every memorable narrative, whether it's a play movie, novel, or song lyrics, Tap into this code and you'll have that same impact on your audiences.

What is this CODE?

It's made up of four neuro-chemicals that are released when we hear sensory rich in emotional stories. The four chemicals are:

- Cortisol
- Oxytocin
- Dopamine
- Endorphins

These are chemicals that you and your listeners have no control over. They're automatically released when we experience specific emotions.

Master the skill of tapping into these neuro-chemicals, and you will tap into your listeners' emotions and create a deep connection with them.

Cortisol

Cortisol is the stress hormone that heightens our attention and focus.

Picture a scene where the main characters in a tenuous situation, surrounded by people who want to do him harm.

Your heart beats faster, and your breath rate speeds up because you're anticipating what might happen next.

Oxytocin

Oxytocin is the bonding hormone that is released during moments of connection and empathy.

Heartfelt stories about losing a close family member or a cherished pet trigger empathy and connection to that person's pain.

Dopamine

Dopamine is the pleasure neurotransmitter because it creates a sense of anticipation and excitement.

Picture a thrilling chase where the hero is pursuing the villain through a maze of obstacles. You're on the edge of your seat, eager to see a positive outcome.

Endorphins

Endorphins are the feel-good chemicals that trigger happiness and satisfaction.

Imagine the story's conclusion in which the main character overcomes all obstacles and experiences that moment of victory.

This leaves listeners feeling satisfied and fulfilled.

Engagement And Impact

When you harness the power of the storytelling code, you create an immersive experience that hooks your audiences, keeps them engaged, and leaves a lasting impact.

The next time you craft a story, weave in sensory rich details and emotions that trigger these powerful reactions. You'll captivate your listeners and forge a deeper connection with them.

Unlock this CODE and watch your stories come to life.

ACTION STEP: Your action step is to include as many of the five senses as you can in your next story. Write your story in a way that triggers sight, smell, sound, taste, and feelings. In your listeners.

Do this and listeners will feel as if they're in the story and their neurotransmitters - their story CODE - will be triggered.
